The Certified Force Protection Professional (CFPP) is a credential which provides demonstrable proof of knowledge and expertise in force protection for government, detection and deterrence for critical infrastructures. The credential can be awarded to the eligible candidates who have successfully passed the examination which assesses the knowledge of 10 main areas in the force protection field. This credential is essential for government officials in law enforcement and security officers in state-run facilities-governmental offices, public transportation security personnel, emergency response professionals, courts, schools, close protection teams of state functionaries, border control and critical infrastructure facilities; and for the private industry: personnel of security companies, airport and airline security professionals, hotel security managers, hospital and shopping center security directors, maritime security officers, VIP/executive protection specialists.

Aspiring candidates have to undergo a rigorous programme of lectures, practical demonstrations and assessment to qualify for the credentials. A correct way of using the credentials is:

Ashton Kyle, CFFP or

Ashton Kyle, Certified Force Protection Professional.

Typical Certification Route and Duration (200 Hours)

“The CFPP program is the first in Singapore and Asia and provides a formal certification system for industry force protections practitioners, who may have received prior or recent training from the forces and international establishments. With accreditation, individuals stand out from the rest by receiving an industry-recognised certification and designation acknowledging your experience and expertise”

*Dr Matthew Yap,
Programme Director
Served in Operation Iraqi Freedom (2003)
and in the Army Reserves and Volunteer Special Constabulary for over 25 Years*

CFPP’s board established and maintained a voluntary and comprehensive certification program through a specifically designed certification process called the Certified Force Protection Professional. It is based on methods currently used in the governmental and private sectors that measure competency in security practices.

The CFPP Board comprises both military and police officers, and senior security practitioners from the security industry. The training delivery and assessment team delivers exceptional value by acquiring the best specialists and employing the best assessment methods from best practices from governments, private organisations and individuals.
